For this collection, I was inspired by Outcast, an Australian fashion brand known for its bold, feminine designs that empower women to feel confident and stand out. Founded in 2020 by Marc and Tamika Brennan, the brand began as a small online store and quickly grew into a global name. Their mission has always been rooted in helping women feel empowered through statement pieces that celebrate individuality and confidence. What sets Outcast apart is their deep connection to their audience and their strong, cohesive visual branding. From bold color palettes and edgy styling to standout models like Emily Venz, their marketing feels more like a lifestyle than just product promotion. Every post tells a story, blending confident visuals with real-time styling and eye-catching locations. This kind of intentional branding and storytelling deeply influenced how I approached my own designs—not just with aesthetics, but with a focus on identity, confidence, and connection.

My goal was to reflect that same bold, confident spirit while bringing in my own aesthetic. I focused on rich colors, contrast, and structured shapes that feel both powerful and feminine. Each piece was designed with the intention of making the wearer feel like the most confident version of themselves.

The white micro shorts are playful yet daring, a bold foundational piece that celebrates the body through minimal design. Paired with the light blue cowl neck top, the look becomes a mix of softness and edge—the gentle drape brings movement and contrast to the more structured shorts. The black cropped corset introduces strength and structure, drawing from Outcast’s signature celebration of form. Styled with sleek black pants, the silhouette becomes grounded, confident, and clean, with subtle details adding visual interest.

The fuchsia corset is one of the collection’s most eye-catching pieces. Its bold color and sculpted fit are made for someone unafraid to take up space. In contrast, the ruffle skirt adds flow and flirtation, softening the look while keeping the bold energy alive. The movement of the skirt brings a dynamic feel, creating a balance between drama and delicacy.

The final piece is a wrap bodycon dress featuring a dark leopard and starry pattern. With an opening at the bottom that reveals both legs, the design blends mystery, elegance, and edge. It’s a standout look meant to feel transformative—something that makes the wearer feel bold just by putting it on.

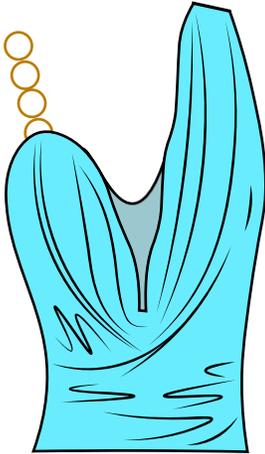

What I admire most about Outcast is how they celebrate individuality. Their designs feel made for people who know who they are—or are learning to embrace it. I wanted to capture that same feeling through strong silhouettes, thoughtful construction, and a fearless point of view. This collection is for anyone ready to express themselves fully, boldly, and unapologetically.
